Date of Report:

REASON FOR REFERRAL:

The client was referred for an assessment in partial requirement for her internship program. This report will also evaluate the client's socio-emotional functioning and readiness for internship.

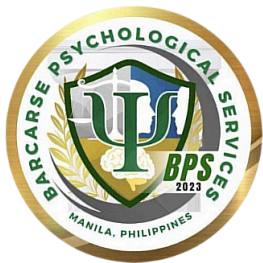

CLIENT BACKGROUND:

Ms. ABCD resides with her adoptive mother, who has cared for her since birth. While she has a good relationship with her three biological siblings, she has never met her father. She reports a difficult relationship with her mother, noting frequent arguments and lack of emotional support. Despite these family issues and growing up without a complete family, she expresses overall contentment. She also receives strong emotional support from her boyfriend, who listens to her when she feels stressed and pressured.

She completed her elementary education at ABCD School, her junior high school education at ABCD School and her senior high school education at ABCD School. During her elementary years, Ms. Domato was competitive, active in extracurricular activities such as badminton and dance, and received academic recognition in English. However, in high school, she experienced losing her drive and became quiet and distant. At present, she is enrolled at the Makati Science Technological Institute of the Philippines which she describes her academic life as balanced, although she finds the workload exhausting.

Ms. Domato experiences challenges balancing her personal life and academic responsibilities. This difficulty is made worse by conflicts with her mother, which often lead to emotional breakdowns. To cope, she talks to her boyfriend, noting that his listening helps a lot. She also gets support from her friends as they go through school challenges together. Her primary goal and motivation is to graduate with her chosen degree. Health-wise, she reports no major concerns or underlying medical problems.

OVERALL PSYCHOLOGICAL ASSESSMENT RESULTS:

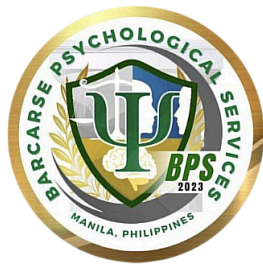

In this section, results from the tests administered, behavioral observations and clinical interviews are interpreted, integrated, and analyzed to describe the overall personality traits and functioning of the client.

Ms. Dumato has good verbal and basic abstract reasoning skills. However, balancing her various daily responsibilities can sometimes be a struggle for her. When overwhelmed by these overlapping demands, her deep internal focus can cause her to look at things differently, frequently leading her to misread operational cues and over-analyze situations to the point of questioning her own judgment. Since managing daily pressures and maintaining operational composure can sometimes be overwhelming for her, this area represents an opportunity for growth and enrichment. Furthermore, she operates best within highly conventional work settings, showing a low inclination towards creative expression. While she possesses an average ability to plan tasks, her lower levels of self-directed organization and follow-through mean she has difficulty managing multiple demands and remains highly susceptible to becoming overwhelmed by shifting operational tasks.

Whenever personal conflict overlaps with increasing workplace demands, she is highly prone to experience emotional breakdowns, moderate anxiety, and disorganized thoughts. This state of distress temporarily lowers her focus and drive, directly affecting her confidence. Her performance and professional stability are closely tied to operating within a structured, predictable routine under leadership that actively listens to her concerns.

IMPRESSION AND CONCLUSION:

Based on the assessment result, Ms. Dumato has good cognitive capabilities for routine tasks but struggles to maintain her focus and composure when balancing a busy workload with personal demands. She possesses an average ability to plan tasks, yet her tendency toward disorganized thought can still hinder her follow-through. Ultimately, Ms. Dumato can maintain consistent performance within a predictable work environment under empathetic supervision that validates her perspective.
